mugabe writes from the belly of the sky.

By Nayyirah Waheed

zimbabwe by tapiwa mugabe is a wide and wondrous tapestry. sweeping and luxurious in its ability to speak multiple languages at once. to speak multiple lives at once. to be multiple continents at once. mugabe writes from the belly of the sky. with longing accuracy and crushing tenderness. his voice. fresh. sweltering. zimbabwe is phenom. and new heart. and the world is so ready for mugabes' fresh hands.

I found a few poems I loved here

By Sunlyonis

I am a poet. I always judge a poetry book based on how it has changed me... its style... if I find a new favorite poem, or lines I want to share. I have a few poems from this book that I love. I jotted down a few lines that really spoke to me. I plan to write a review on my blog in the near future in support of this poet. I don't know Mugabe, but I am grateful for this book. I think other readers, writers and poets would appreciate this work.

That was the best nosey decision ever because I love her and Ward ...

By Xian Xian

Mugabe is a poet that seemed have to come out of nowhere for me, along with Nayyirah Waheed and Yrsa Daley-Ward, but I discovered salt. because I think somebody else was reading it on Goodreads and me being nosey, of course I checked it out, despite not knowing that person at all. That was the best nosey decision ever because I love her and Ward too. Then Zimbabwe came around with them and the first thing I saw was the beautiful painting on the cover. And I wondered, "What are these poems like?" At that time I didn't know Mugabe had a Tumblr blog. But when I did find it, I read a few poems here and there and then I just started listening to the music from the wonderful playlist on there and doing homework. This has nothing to do with the poetry but this is how I discover most books I love. Out of thin air, or the spaces of the internet. Off topic sentence: My mother got a kindle for Christmas and when this ReadColor free kindle book event came around, I went to her kindle and downloaded all four books onto it. She's not really into poetry, but I hope she likes these. She's the reason why I read books in the first place.

But like I've said hundreds of time on this blog, I don't have much to say when it comes to poetry. Even as Notes on the Shore, after I got rid of the cheesy title Words, Notes, and Fiction, this blogger still has a hard time talking about poetry. But I do highly recommend it. Zimbabwe is the song of love and family and a constant, tear filled nostalgia for the past or maybe the want for a better one. And then the future, we hope that it's better than the past, for our children and their children too. I'm not sure what I'm talking about here. Love yourself more than you love anyone else, because usually that love is taken advantage of. But of course, you must love your family members the same way you love yourself. Mugabe's poetry is filled with love and a passion that seems so rare in poetry, the type that actually really touches you and understands you, in such few words. Because honestly, only one metaphor and two stanzas is all you need to reach someone.
